The one-and-a-half story frame building constructed by David Evans, the property owner, as a recreational and cultural hall between 1906-1921. The small building with German siding measured two bays wide and three bays deep until it received an expansion in the late twentieth century. The features and materials of the Band Hall are common reflections of the district's architecture. The Lonaconing City Band used the building to practice during the mid-twentieth century.

The building will be demolished as the result of the development project.

The building, currently known as the Band Hall, was erected between 1906 and 1921 as a recreational and cultural hall. The one-and-a-half-story building is constructed of frame, clad in German siding, with a front gable roof. Measuring two bays wide and three bays deep, the modest building was expanded to the east in the late 20th century by the erection of a one bay deep addition. Despite this addition and years of deterioration, the one-room Band Hall retains its original ornamentation. Located within the Lonaconing Historic District, the building contributes as an example of the type of rural structures constructed during the early part of the 20th century for community recreation.

SITE

The Band Hall is one of a grouping of three buildings located at 455-1/2 West Main Street. The buildings are set approximately fifty feet east from the town's main thoroughfare at the intersection of Star and Ayers alleys. The Band Hall, facing west, is situated to the southeast of the main farm house. The freestanding building is constructed on the slope of the property.

EXTERIOR

The Band Hall is constructed of frame, clad in German siding with corner boards, with wooden posts set on large rocks. The impermanent foundation has partially washed away, largely due in part to the slope on which the building was constructed. The rectangular building has a front gable roof sheathed in asphalt shingles. The original location of an interior chimney is visible on the roof, just south of the ridge. The roof overhangs slightly on the south and north elevations with a boxed cornice that returned on the west and east elevations. As originally constructed it was two bays wide and three bays deep; however, the building was extended by the construction of a one bay deep addition to the east elevation, creating the present four bay deep plan. The addition, constructed of German siding, is set upon a concrete block foundation.

The facade (west elevation) consists of a single entry with a window opening. The entry opening, edged with square-edged surrounds, is filled with a four-paneled wood door and a single-light transom. The modest opening has a wood sill and lintel. Unequally placed to the north of the entry, the elongated window opening is trimmed with square-edged surrounds, a wood sill, and an ogee-molded cornice. The opening, encased with a solid wood shutter with triangular surface hinges, has a 2/2 wood sash window. Located in the gable end of the facade is a round opening. Edged with square-edged surrounds, the opening is filled with a wooden star circumscribed by pointed labels.

The south elevation has two openings symmetrically placed in the original portion of the building. The openings are trimmed with square-edged surrounds, a wood sill, and an ogee-molded cornice. The opening, encased with a solid wood shutter with triangular surface hinges, has a 2/2 wood sash window. A single entry with a wooden door is located on the south elevation of the concrete block foundation of the addition.

The east elevation of the addition has a single square opening trimmed with square-edged surrounds. The opening is filled with a three-light fixed window.¹

Identical to the south elevation, the north elevation has two symmetrically placed openings. The openings are trimmed with square-edged surrounds, a wood sill, and an ogee-molded cornice. The opening in the western bay is encased with a solid wood shutter with triangular surface hinges, while the opening in the eastern bay has a 2/2 wood sash window and a single louvered wood shutter.

INTERIOR

Although the interior was not included in the survey due to the deteriorated state of the building, examination through a window revealed the structure to contain one-room. The walls are finished with a beaded wainscoting and molded chair rail with a plaster field. A picture molding with a wave and rope motif encircle the room, save the addition at the eastern end. The window openings are trimmed by multi-beaded casings with bull's eye corner blocks. The wood floors are tongue-and-groove.

EARLY HISTORY OF LONACONING

The small town of Lonaconing, incorporated in 1890, is located approximately fourteen miles southwest of the county seat of Cumberland in Allegany County, Maryland. Presently, Lonaconing contains a variety of 19th and early 20th century commercial, industrial, and residential buildings which attest to the development of Lonaconing as a center of the iron, coal, and silk industries in the George's Creek Valley of Western Maryland.

Lonaconing was began as a town and commercial center with the arrival of entrepreneurs, John Alexander of Annapolis and Philip T. Tyson. The businessmen purchased a tract known as "Commonwealth" in 1833, which contained 3,817 acres along George's Creek (now Lonaconing). In 1836, they petitioned the Maryland Legislature for a corporate charter which would permit them to raise further capital for their proposed operations through the sale of shares. Later that same year, the Maryland General Assembly granted the right to form the corporation, and the George's Creek Mining Company was formed with the authority "to open and work such mines of coal, iron, and other minerals as may exist on the tract of land on George's Creek known as Commonwealth, now owned by them...." The company constructed a furnace complex to manufacture pig iron, using coal and coke rather than charcoal for the smelting process. The Lonaconing iron furnace was the first in the United States to successfully use bituminous coal and coke in making pig iron.

The George's Creek Coal and Iron Company was also responsible for bring workers to the area and constructing permanent housing. The company was dependent on local farmers to construct various parts of the furnace complex, the store, church, sawmill, and other buildings which made up the original village. By 1837, the company had established a village of 700 people. Living under the "Rules of Residency" set by the company, the workers were required to work every day except Sundays and Christmas, labor from sunrise to sunset, and make purchased only from the company store. This system of total company domination did not end until the 1860s, when the company began to sell off its sizable land holdings.

The furnace produced pig iron from 1839 until 1855, when the company turned to the production of coal. The development of the coal industry prompted growth in the George's Creek Valley, especially Lonaconing. Numerous coal companies were formed and mines were opened, with workers flocking from Scotland, Wales, England, Ireland, and Germany. Business boomed and all varieties of stores were established to meet the needs of the people. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the first railroad line to Cumberland, arrived by 1851, and the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad tunneled a distance of 500 feet under Frostburg in 1856 to make Lonaconing easily accessible.

PROPERTY HISTORY

David Koontz, together with Salem and Margaret Koontz, purchased a large tract of improved property from the George's Creek Coal and Iron Company in the late 1860s. The land, designated as the Mill Lot, stretched along what is now known as West Main Street, just to the west of George's Creek. By 1874, David Koontz had subdivided the land into two parcels, bisecting them with a twelve foot alley that ran east to west. On September 22, 1874, the southern portion, or lot one, was conveyed to Patrick Tully, while the northern portion, or lot two, was conveyed to George Henry Fresh for $1,425. Located in the heart of business district, lot two was bounded by Star Alley, Douglas Avenue, George's Creek, and a modest segment of the commercial strip of West Main Street.

During the period between 1870 and 1880, the town of Lonaconing continued to grow and prosper. From a population of 800 in 1865, the community has grown to 2,808 in 1878. Regarded as one of the largest and most prominent mining towns in the George's Creek Valley, Lonaconing developed a central business district along Main Street, and residential neighborhoods on Church and Douglas streets. The town boasted a large general store, two hotels, an opera house, a variety of churches, banks, and two newspapers.

Disaster struck the town of Lonaconing on September 7, 1881 when a fire destroyed 53 buildings in just three hours. The fire ravaged all of the business district along Main and Union streets to George's Creek and many of the houses from the Maryland Hotel to Koontz Run. One year after the fire, in 1882, George H. Fresh, and his wife Lucy Fresh, sold lot two to Thomas Carr. In 1884, the property was threatened again by one of the worst floods in the town's history which eradicated houses and businesses along George's Creek.

Faced with adversity, Lonaconing immediately took steps to strengthen and reconstruct the community. With much of the rebuilding being undertaken around the surviving buildings, the town was officially incorporated in 1890 and began to lay permanent sidewalks and streets. During this period, the property owned by Thomas Carr was subdivided and leased to numerous merchants, who assisted in the reconstruction of the town by erecting commercial structures fronting on Main Street and Star Alley. According to the Sanborn map of 1891, the frame structures were occupied by a confectionery, saloon, meat market, newspaper office, and buggy shed.

In 1892, Thomas Carr sold the improved property to David M. Evans for $3,650. Although the functions of the buildings had changed, the land was not further developed between 1892 and 1897. The growing population of Lonaconing (approximately 7,000 by 1900), prompted the construction of several single-family dwellings on the Evans property by 1906. Facing south, the three frame dwellings were constructed east of the commercial building on Main Street. The freestanding Clupp House, designated as 455-1/2 West Main Street on the 1906 Sanborn map, was located roughly midpoint between Main Street and George's Creek. Two semi-detached buildings, known as 455-1/3 and 455-1/4 Main Street, were located to the east of the Clupp House. Never occupied by Evans, the dwellings were leased over the years to merchants, factory workers, and miners.

BUILDING HISTORY

By September 1910, David M. and Martha S. Evans transferred the property to H. Clay Evans. Under the direction of H. Clay Evans, the large parcel was developed by the construction of a motion picture theater which was located at the corner of Main Street and Star Alley; an Armory Hall fronting on Star Alley; and a frame hall to the southeast of the Clupp House which was commonly known as the Band Hall.

H. Clay Evans died in August 1926, bequeathing his estate jointly to his wife Helen V. Evans and Benjamin H. Evans. Within a year, Benjamin Evans was the sole owner of the property, retaining the entire parcel until his death in 1952. Under his ownership the parcel was further improved by the construction of the Sloan Brothers Glass Cutting Building, which was sited on George's Creek. Two semi-detached frame buildings fronting Main Street were replaced by a larger brick commercial structure. The semi-detached single-family dwellings designated as 455-1/3 and 455-1/4 Main Street were replaced with the present freestanding building, known as the Star Alley House. Additionally, the Clupp House was extensively altered by the addition of a wing, giving the building it's present L-shape.

Mary S. Evans, the widow of Benjamin Evans, inherited the property in 1952 and together with numerous other lots, transferred it to the Evans Realty Company, Inc. in 1962. During the next two decades, the realty company began to subdivide and sell portions of the large square parcel. In June 1984, Frances E. Clupp and her son Gibson F. Clupp purchased an irregularly shaped lot located to the east of Main Street. Included in the sale was the Clupp House, the Star Alley House, and the Band Hall, all of which encroached onto property retained by Evans Realty Company, Inc.

Frances Clupp resided in the main dwelling which bears her name, while her son lived in the Star Alley House. The Band Hall, traditionally used as a practice hall for Lonaconing's City Band, was used as storage space by the Clupps. By 1992, the Clupps had defaulted on their mortgage and the property reverted back to Evans Realty Company, Inc. The realty company continues to own the buildings, which are currently vacant and in a state of severe deterioration.

The town of Lonaconing has continuously experienced a reduction in population, due greatly in part to the decline in coal production. Despite this, a limited amount of mining and commercial businesses linger to serve the historic community. Today, Lonaconing continues to exemplify the character of a late 19th to early 20th century mining town, with a cohesive collection of buildings that reflect the economic growth and decline of this region of the state. In 1983, a great portion of the commercial and residential community
